Re: ECOS Easter Weekend Projects

Baking cookies and feeding the homeless during the easter weekend opened my eyes to how fortunate I am and how important it is to help others that are less fortunate. I noticed that we study homelessness solutions and debate about the issue in class, but I never really thought that these people have their own stories and shouldn't all be grouped together as one big problem to Hawaii's society. When we walked through their living area, so many questions were rushing through my head about these people's daily lives. They don't stress about the same things we do, nor do they experience the same things we do. Therefore, I really liked this service project, and I would willingly do it again when I get the chance.
